portions are formed while maintaining the porous structure of the porous material. Document 1 does not indicate that the porous film is a polytetrafluoroethylene film, but it would be easy for a person skilled in the art to conceive of applying the polytetrafluoroethylene film set forth in document 2 as a conductive film in the invention set forth in document 1 in order to solve the problem of obtaining a conductive film with elastic properties.

The invention set forth in claims 11 and 12 does not involve an inventive step in the light of documents 1 and 3 cited in the international search report. Document 3 (paragraph 0015) indicates that when producing an anisotropic conductive film having porous polytetrafluoroethylene film as a base film, through holes are formed using synchrotron radiated light or laser light with a wavelength not exceeding 250nm. In addition, ultrasonic machining is a known technique of making holes.

The invention set forth in claim 15 does not involve an inventive step in the light of documents 1 and 3 cited in the international search report. Document 3 indicates that electroless plating is carried out by a similar process to the process set forth in claim 15 of this application.

The invention set forth in claims 17 and 18 does not involve an inventive step in the light of documents 1, 3 and 4 cited in the international search report. Document 4 indicates that the adherence of unnecessary conductive paste to the substrate is prevented by providing a layer comprising a polytetrafluoroethylene film.

The invention set forth in claims 19 and 20 involves an inventive step in relation to the aforementioned documents. None of the cited documents indicates that a liquid is impregnated into a laminar body comprising a polytetrafluoroethylene film, and that said liquid is then made to freeze.

The invention set forth in claim 21 does not involve an inventive step in the light of document 1 cited in the international search report. Document 1 does not disclose specific values for particle size and the quantity of conductive metal deposited, but these values are a design matter which would be determined by a person skilled in the art taking into account various conditions when implementing the feature set forth in document 1, and this feature does not involve an inventive step.
